ARTIST STATEMENT

As an artist, my second name is "germenevtika". This term signifies the method of investigating and interpreting texts and symbols, employed to comprehend and unveil their meanings. The primary objective of germenevtika is to decipher the true essence of messages and convey their significance. This fundamentally characterizes my approach to art.

I am deeply intrigued by delving into the psychology of human interactions with one another and with the world around them, channeling human emotions into visual form. I relish dissecting emotions like joy, sorrow, indifference, ecstasy, and jealousy. Because emotions are abstract, the pursuit of visually representing them is particularly captivating.

Through my visual language, I interpret the intricacies of the human psyche and interpersonal dynamics within our surroundings. To communicate with my audience, I employ my body as one of the tools, constantly experimenting with it. In my photographs, I use handcrafted masks and various elements of the composition made from wire, fabric, paper, and silicone.

Frequently, the faces of my characters in the photographs remain concealed, diverting attention away from visages and encouraging viewers to engage with the visual image as a whole. Consequently, viewers are initially confronted with their own emotions stirred by these artworks.

The overall composition of my photographs echoes surrealism, allowing ample room for imagination and prompting contemplation.

SHORT BIOGRAPHY

Early on, Ksenia felt the need to show the world she saw through her own eyes – to juxtapose the incomparable and convey her feelings through visual imagery. Born in the depths of Russia in the city Tyumen and raised in the milieu of the national cultures of small peoples (in the republics of Bashkortostan and Tatarstan), she understood that self-identity and self-expression are unwavering foundations of creativity. To possess the ability to use them in art, she studied at a painting school and pursued graphic design at a university in Russia. Upon arriving in Berlin in 2017, she felt freedom and began to express herself as an artist, utilizing photography as her primary tool. Her talents were immediately recognized at exhibitions and artist prizes. In 2023, she won first place in the Julia Margaret Cameron Award competition.
